1) What is a recent good example of co-parenting or parenting skills you have applied since taking this course?

2) What is an example of a co-parenting or parenting skill you still need to work on?

According to the lessons in our Cornerstone Text, answer the following as True or False.

	True	False
1) When speaking to your children about the divorce, make sure you repeatedly reassure your children that the divorce/separation was not their fault.
2) It is a good idea to put the attorney on a speaker phone when discussing your case in front of the children.
3) It is important to give the ex-partner advance notice if you plan to sign a child up for an extracurricular activity.
4) If your teen does not come home on time, they should lose the privilege of using the family car. This is considered a "Logical consequence".
5) If a child reports abuse and neglect to you and you confirm something took place, you should immediately report the action to child protective service agency and the police.
6) Most likely as your children grow older, they will prefer you and the ex-partner not be in the same place at the same time for important events (Graduations and important events).
7) When your child tells you about issues (i.e., allowance, chores, etc.) in the ex-partners home, tell them to bring those issues up directly with the ex. Decline to get involved.
8) Do not use a child as a confidante or depend on a child for emotional support. Instead seek your own counseling.
9) Skype, phone calls, e-mail, and arranging to read the same book or watch a similar show are all examples of ways you can stay in touch with your child when away for a long time.
10) In good coparenting, use TP or OFW or email to inform the other parent of what basic routines are being followed and how well they are working at your home.
11) In a blended family, you should establish the step-parent as the strict enforcer of your rules from the start.
12) Coparenting will improve if you focus on the facts and not past mistakes or reasons for the divorce.
13) If your goal is to get your child to stop acting up and calm down, then spanking does not help. Use an alternative discipline approach instead.
14) In our text, the four goals of children's misbehavior we covered are: Attention, Power, Revenge and Display of Inadequacy.
15) A child who continues to forget their jacket will expect you to bring them a jacket every time. If you do this action, you are completing a "Natural Consequence".

Please also answer the following for our program managers.
